

When you move material or items, it always helps to make sure they're properly secured for transport. While they may be heavy and difficult to move at first, these loads quickly build up momentum, along with whatever you're using to transport them. And there is no finer way to find out whether you've secured the item or material properly than the time-honored "sudden stop." This picture should be a fine reminder of why your workers need to pay attention to load security.
